Accountable

    after Emily Arthur’s Coastal Sage

You hang my wages across the book in the shadows of wing, of feet curled around what is due

You throw in some sage for wisdom, roots in logic for how I must behave, budget my love, my Oklahoma sins

There was once a wall, but now I squint up through a glass ceiling, birds of prayer hovering, darkest clouds to my wealth

Do you want me to bleed shadows?
Budget my sighs?
It is not clear what you owe me
